The parameter represents the degree of fracture resistance (R-curve) as defined in $22 K c (3) R K c$ where is fracture resistance, is the crack size, and is a parameter. Equation 2 is a common R expression of rising R-curve behavior for ceramic materials. When 0, the case reduces to a flat-1 3 P K K R-curve such that and . R-curve behavior of a brittle material can be if R IC estimated based on Equation (3) by determining the parameter from (the slope of) the indent vs strength. indent load data (such as Figure 9) and then using this value to determine the parameter using a known value of fracture toughness (obtained by, for example, SEPB) c evaluated with the particular precrack size ()...
